What's the difference between the Traditional, Tension and High-Peak cover styles?

- The Traditional cover is the most frequently used in the tent industry. This popular cover design attaches to the frame with straps and buckles on the inside perimeter of the tent. In addition, the valance on the Traditional style cover has scalloped edges. Expandable feature is available in Traditional covers.
- The sleek look of the Tension cover attaches to the frame with straps and steel "S" hooks down legs to the base plate which ultimately tightens the cover for a smooth finish.
- Our High-Peak cover is designed with a high slope, a stylish peak and smooth curves to stand out from the rest. The High-Peak cover attaches the same way as the Tension. A mast pole is simply added to the crown to create the peak.

Versatility

What is the purpose of color-coded end caps?

We strive to create products so that our customers will benefit. The color-coded ends caps were designed to make the identification of tubing lengths simple. All standard size tubing is assigned a specific color to simplify installation and storage by keeping all the same colors together. In addition, the color-coded end caps will keep dirt out of the tubing.

Do I need a Tent Jack to install a large tent?

No. However, our heavy duty commercial tent jack design is intended to make the installation of frame tents as easy as possible. These tent jacks prove to be a valuable tool with the use of smaller crews and larger tents.

Is an expandable tent cover more valuable than a one-piece tent cover?

An expandable cover can ultimately save you money by purchasing one tent and having the versatility of a multi-sized tent. This feature can help accommodate you and your customer's needs with providing the perfect size for any occasion.
